

Mystery Shopper Network

Contributed by Zak Scharfen
Friday, 16 June 2006
Last Updated Saturday, 29 July 2006

Have you ever heard of a secret group of stealth professionals mingling inconspicuously amongst you? Yeah, that's right. These elite and proud few move unseen and unheard throughout your community each day. They are called the mystery shopper network. Okay, maybe that was way overdone. Probably just a tad too much mission impossible stuff. However, the mystery shopper network is real, whether you've actually heard of them or not. These are the individuals who browse the malls and shopping outlets in order to determine the quality of customer service as alike to book agents who search quality and quantity of books available. Hey, if you have no idea what I'm talking about, it may be time you hopped online and had a look-see.

What do you do to earn a buck? Maybe you want to consider being part of the mystery shopper network. I considered this gig back in the day. However, I had to re-think the whole deal when I came to the bleak conclusion that I would be in shopping malls a lot. Of course if you like shopping malls, then the mystery shopper network is probably right for you. This organization basically assigns a variety of jobs to individuals of specific areas. For example, if you live in Chicago, then you would probably get a number of assignments. It all has to do with the amenities in your area. The mystery shopper network will send you an email with the details of the assignment, then you will proceed in browsing that particular shop or restaurant and making a small purchase. Now, your job is to report back. Was the service good or bad? Who was your server? How did the establishment look? These are some general concerns that are typically addressed. However, don't fret; the mystery shopper network will pay you for your written report and the item you purchased. It's as easy as that. The mystery shopper network deals with anything from restaurants, to motels, to department stores. If you think the mystery shopper network sounds ideal for you and your area, then you'd better get online now. Pop open Google and punch in the keywords, "mystery shopper network." You will be overwhelmed by the results. It's not difficult to acquire work from the mystery shopper network and it's as easy as dealing with your PC from home.